How can something so wrong be so right..?

When Sally and Geon's parents married, they worried about how an interracial family would be perceived in their small town. But they wouldn't have worried so much if they knew that, as soon as high school hit, Geon would give them a lot more to worry about. Drinking, dealing, cutting class, and going through girls like Kleenex are his primary interests, and he has nothing but disdain for his goody-goody stepsister, whose straight A's, virginal relationships, and cheer practice have her headed straight for the Ivy league.

But when Sally ends up on the wrong side of a spiked drink at the senior class' winter bash, Geon is the only one who can calm her down and keep her from going completely over the edge. And being that close to his stepsister brings up all sorts of feelings he'd tried to hide...and causes Sally to see her troublemaking, hell-raising stepbrother in a whole new light...
