Around the world many people learn French pronunciation. All seem easy at first but after a while they feel anxious and the more they learn, the more all become complicated. How many times did you say or did you hear people saying that “French is very difficult”? These words are the first I heard when I came to Japan. So, for many years, I investigated some Japanese universities, colleges and private schools to see how French is taught in Japan.

My conclusion? They all rely on textbooks written by Japanese native speakers. Unfortunately, the materials used lack proper guidance and accuracy. Proof is the following comments given to me by some serious University professors. “We do not know what to teach and how to teach. French pronunciation is difficult and our students do not like studying grammar”. This tendency is not new and does not pertain to the Japanese educational system. I heard the same comments given by three American young ladies on vacation in France. I also heard the same comments in Great Britain. So, the one to blame is neither the student, nor the teacher but the methodology itself! It is clear that around the world we need a NEW METHODOLOGY for learning French language efficiently. This textbook will help you to do that in 3 easy steps.
