I Think I Just Killed a Man... Kenneth Morton

On the night of his best friend's return to the city, Mario Mann, a 27-year-old HR specialist, ends up getting more than a few nostalgic drinks with his friends. After a misunderstanding that ends up leaving a man dead, and another man out to kill him, panicked, Mario Mann finds himself on the run. In his attempts to turn himself in and explain, he's impeded by rambunctious teens, psychedelics, his own self doubt, and an unrelenting depression that has built up throughout the years.
