Three entities within the federal Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) are developing a plan of action to explore how to address the needs of specific populations disproportionately affected by Alzheimer's disease and other dementias. The current National Plan to Address Alzheimer's Disease has a generalized approach, but does not specifically address the needs of populations with greater needs. These populations include people with early-onset dementia (before age 60), racial and ethnic minorities, persons with behavioral health conditions, and persons with Down syndrome and other intellectual disabilities...
